

Remei AG coordinates the whole bioRe® supply chain - from farm to delivery of the finished product to brands and retailers

“Treating mankind and nature with respect is the key to sustained economic success”. This is the Remei business philosophy that has taken what started as a private initiative in 1991 to become one of the largest organic cotton production systems worldwide. Featuring the label bioRe® the Swiss textile specialists Remei AG produce high-quality yarns and textiles within an ecologically and socially sustainable process chain. More than 8,300 small-holder farmers have joined the bioRe® companies in India and Tanzania and have adopted the ecologically sound principles of organic farming.

Internationally recognized certification confirms Remei's adherence to these principles, including social standards BSCI and SA8000 and organic agriculture standards EU 834/2007 and NOP. In addition, the bioRe® Foundation has been established to initiate and promote social projects in producer countries, such as mobile health units and community schools.

At Remei, ethical responsibility and corporate thinking are aligned through five fundamental principles:

- organic cotton farming, including advising and training farmers and guaranteed purchase of organic cotton from the bioRe® farmers;
- ecologically sound garment production;
- fairness with respect to farmers and textile workers through social projects and farmer visibility initiatives;
- transparency through supply chain tracking right back to the field;
- and innovation with CO<sub>2</sub> neutral bioRe® production.

The bioRe® label stands for Remei AG's quality, as well as its socially and ecologically sensitive chain of production, featuring organic cotton processed into fashionable high-quality clothing for brands and trading companies. Remei services include the making of collections and complete production management in:

- clothing for all the family - jersey and french fabrics including elastane blends
